Flounders is a large international company that has been operating for over 200 years. The directors of the company are becoming concerned about the future of their company as more and more clients do not want to do business with them because they say the company is sexist. The problem is that the company has always relied on men to make all the important decisions and to hold all the management positions. It is not that they set out to be sexist; it is just the way things have always been done. The directors realise that they need to change, but they need help.

Draw up an action plan for how the company should go about making the changes. Give specific suggestions. (6)
