Natiki

The Kalahari evening sun sinks away behind the thorn trees. The hunters come back from the veld. At the kraal people are talking and laughing.

Natiki's two sisters and her mother rub their bodies with fat. They are making themselves beautiful, because tonight is the dance of the full moon.

Natiki's heart is burning to go along to the big dance as well, but when she asks her mother whether she can go too, her mother only says, "Go and fetch the goats, and make sure you bring them in before nightfall. Bring along some wood and make a big fire so that the wild animals will stay away."

Her mother and her two sisters treat her very, very badly. They are jealous of her because she is more beautiful than her two older sisters. They are afraid that a hunter might take a fancy to her at the dance.

So Natiki goes out into the veld. By the time she comes back to the kraal with the goats, her mother and sisters have already left for the dance. She places the handful of porcupine quills she collected on the wall of the cooking enclosure.

New girl

The new girl stood at Miss Moon's desk,
 Her face pale as a drawing
 On white paper
 Her lips coloured too heavily
 With a too-dark crayon. 5
 When the others shouted, Me! Me!
 I curled my fists,
 Tried not to think of friendship,
 Or whispered secrets
 Or games for two players. 10
 But the empty seat beside me
 Shimmered with need
 And my loneliness dragged her like a magnet.

As she sat down
 I caught the musty smell of old forests
 Noticed the threads that dangled 15
 At her thin wrists,
 The purple stitches that circled
 Her swan's neck.

Yet I loved her quietness, 20
 The way she held her pencil
 Like a feather,
 The swooping curves of her name,
 The dreaminess of her cold eyes.

At night, I still wonder 25
 Where she sleeps,
 If she sleeps,
 And what Miss Moon will say
 To her tattered parents
 On Open Day.

Section B: Language Structures and Conventions

Read the following passage and answer the language questions based on it.

Natiki (continued ...)

The moon is already high when she sets off along the path. Here and there, as she wals, she sticks a porcupine quill into the ground.

When she comes to the top of the rise and sees the big fire of the dance, she starts to feel a bit nervous. What will her mother and sisters say? But then she smells the meat on the coals and her feet skip this way and that, and the springbok ears go shirr-shirr around her ankles.

When she gets to the fire, she stands on one side at first. Then she catches sight of her mother and her sisters. But they are wandering, along with other women who have arrived at the party alone, and a stranger.

Natiki goes to stand with the women who are singing and clapping their hands. She joins in the singing. She claps her hands and her feet are light. A young hunter smiles at her as he dances past. His eyes rest on her.

When it starts getting late, Natiki's sisters begin to yawn – gapping yawns that make them look even uglier. Natiki's mother sizes up things and says to her eldest daughter, "Just take more meat for yourselves, and then we'll walk home." And then they are gone.
